Shue Woon run a shop on a highway. He sold Chinese objects of Art. ~~So the name for his shop was Chinese Art Shop.~~ On Election Day last November he opened his shop which was originally a bungalow. He chose that ^{DAY} because it was the day on which all the Americans chose their president, and it must be good.

Whether it was good or bad he did business alone. He lived ~~alone also.~~ ^{IN THE BUNGALOW.} His friends were worried for him. Why he conducted a one-man business was not important; how he could endure his lonely hours was the thing they did not understand.

His friends knew he came from a large family and also a father of several children. Many years ago, after he had been well educated in China he came to the United ~~States~~ ^{States} for a higher learning, and to his fatherland he brought back the art of making silent motion pictures which he produced. But at that time none of his stars was willing to be kissed until he had lost his shirt which was ^{also} brought back from the United States. Returning to America he managed six chop suey restaurants and made everyone like him. The last one he managed was in West Virginia while the war was ~~still~~ on. Having heard the news of his resignation some of the ^{HIS} patrons were too sad to eat their chicken chow mein and yet they paid for it; All his waitresses cried about his departure, telling him he was the nicest person they had ever worked for. Unable to cope with the situation he dried their lovely blue eyes with his ^{HIS} own handkerchief, the product of China. All his life had been surrounded by people.

His selling in art objects was ~~rather~~ ^{FATHER} somewhat slow due to many reasons. Sometimes he spoke to no one for days. Only once in a while he went to shop. His friends, ~~feared he might go insane,~~ ^{WERE WORRIED FOR HIM, THEY DID NOT KNOW HOW HE COULD ENDURE HIS LONELINESS, BUT} he kept himself mentally healthy. He let nature teach him many lessons in
